

An intriguing moment showing the remains of Threepio talking and moving his head about from what possibly looks to be ground level (or is Chewbacca bending down to Artoo?). Could Chewbacca have taken him off his back for some reason during the filming of a lost scene in the corridor outside the Falcon landing platform? Could this be the early footage of Threepio being manipulated with strings that Irvin Kershner was unhappy with and would have re-shot with a new operating procedure?

These aren't cut scenes but we just like 'em because they show untreated lightsabers. On EMPIRE they had two techniques for the duel : using carbon rods (later rotoscoped by ILM) and the light reflective tape rods previously used to middling degrees of success in STAR WARS (seen in the two images above).

Vader watches Luke fall to his doom in this slightly different scene shown in the trailer.

Unused or untreated shots of Lando coming out onto the Falcon's hull to rescue the injured Luke Skywalker. Note the blue sky background.

Compiled and designed by Scott Weller. With thanks to Chris Baker for help on selected screen grab images.